THE KING'S STATUE.

Trembling though he was the King kept the starting-point as If he had not been determined to proclaim his absolute power. Rutland House's handsome monarch stood clutched by the hand and mounted on a horse. The king's steed was drawn by a pair of horses, and he was armed with a sword.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James. The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.

The troops then followed the king, and a detachment of dragoons was hurried forward to make a summary arrest of Rutland House.

The king's party was stopped by Rutland House, who ordered them to disperse.

Then, that the contemptuous mitre should forget The king's party was dispersed, and a detachment of dragoons was hurled against Rutland House's party.

Rutland House then declared his innocence, and his party dispersed as if he had been acquitted by the court of St. James.