DIARY OF A PENNSYLVANIA RESERVE.

Story of Campaigning with the Army of the Potomac in 1862—Hard Marching, Scanty Rations, Desperate Fighting, and Death of Author at Fredericksburg.

THE PICKET IN CHARGE.

This is the third time we have had our picket at this station. The first and second times we were expected to be relieved in a few hours, but we have been ordered in by General Meade to be on the alert. We have orders to keep the road clear for the transportation of troops, and to guard against any attempt to pass our line. We have been told that the enemy is expected to make a movement to the north, and that our duty is to be vigilant and watchful.

CEAR.A CREEK.

A Confederate's Remembrances of the Desolate Engagement.

BY MAEL. D. B. HUMPHREY.

The battle of Cedar Creek, fought on the 19th of October last, was one of the most desperate and bloody of the war. The Confederates were driven back in confusion, and the Union forces advanced with great momentum. The evening of the 19th, the Confederates made a desperate stand at the bridge over the Cedar Creek, but were again driven back. The fight lasted until midnight, and the Confederates were finally driven into the wilderness. The battle cost the Confederates over 2,000 casualties, and the Union forces captured a large number of prisoners.

RETURN OF THE SOUTH.

The South has declared its independence, and has issued a proclamation declaring its intention to continue the war. The Union forces have been ordered to prepare for a general invasion of the South, and to advance with all possible haste. The South has also declared its intention to establish a government, and to elect a president and a congress. The Union forces have been ordered to be ready for action at any time, and to be prepared to meet the enemy at any point.

END OF THE STORY.

The story of the campaign in the South has ended. The Union forces have been victorious, and the Confederates have been driven back into the wilderness. The South has declared its independence, and has issued a proclamation declaring its intention to continue the war. The Union forces have been ordered to prepare for a general invasion of the South, and to advance with all possible haste. The South has also declared its intention to establish a government, and to elect a president and a congress. The Union forces have been ordered to be ready for action at any time, and to be prepared to meet the enemy at any point.

SPRING'S GREAT ELECTION.

The spring has come, and the great election is at hand. The Union forces have been ordered to prepare for action, and to be ready for any contingency. The South has declared its independence, and has issued a proclamation declaring its intention to continue the war. The Union forces have been ordered to advance with all possible haste, and to be ready for action at any time. The South has also declared its intention to establish a government, and to elect a president and a congress. The Union forces have been ordered to be ready for action at any time, and to be prepared to meet the enemy at any point.

END OF THE STORIES.

The story of the campaign in the South has ended. The Union forces have been victorious, and the Confederates have been driven back into the wilderness. The South has declared its independence, and has issued a proclamation declaring its intention to continue the war. The Union forces have been ordered to prepare for a general invasion of the South, and to advance with all possible haste. The South has also declared its intention to establish a government, and to elect a president and a congress. The Union forces have been ordered to be ready for action at any time, and to be prepared to meet the enemy at any point.