LETTERS FROM THE TRENCHES.

A Contemporaneous Account of the Investment and Surrender of Vicksburg.

The siege of Vicksburg, which has been the subject of so much attention in the last few days, has not yet been definitely decided. The City is still held by the Confederates, and the contest is likely to continue for some time. The American forces are now in a strong position, and are well supplied with provisions. The Confederates are still in possession of the city, and are making every effort to hold it.

END OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Lincoln sends the following dispatch to Governor Hancock:

"The campaign has ended. The enemy has evacuated Vicksburg, and the city is now in American hands. The Union forces have suffered heavily in the campaign, but they have gained a great victory. The city of Vicksburg is now in American hands."
