

PREFACE.

“I SPEAK for that heroic State who was baptized in her infancy with the sprinkling of revolutionary blood on King’s Mountain; who five years afterward struck again for independence under the banner of the daring young State of Franklin; who grappled single-handed and alone, for fifty years, with the dusky warriors of the forest, in all their battles from the Kentucky line to the Southern Gulf; who beat back the British legions at New Orleans; who smote the false Spaniard at Pensacola; who rushed with Taylor into the breach at Monterey, and shared in the triumphal march from Vera Cruz to Mexico. Thrice has she furnished to the nation in times of peril a Chief Magistrate, each of signal abilities. To the Senate she has given the eloquence of Felix Grundy, the wisdom of George W. Campbell, the antique virtues and Roman purity of Hugh L. White, the magnificent oratory of the generous Foster, and the far-reaching statesmanship of the peerless Bell. And although she has so recently laid away beneath the sods of a hundred battle-fields a wealth of intellect and manhood sufficient to enrich an empire, she can still point with pride to a host of living children worthy of their noble lineage.”

In the Memory
OF
THE HEROES,
Whose Valor and Blood Earned and Maintained for TENNESSEE
The Glorious Name of
VOLUNTEER STATE,
These Volumes are
WITH REVERENCE AND ADMIRATION
LOVINGLY INSCRIBED

PEOPLE OF TENNESSEE.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

IN a circular addressed to the people of Tennessee, and dated Nashville, January 31, 1882, Ex-Gov. James D. Porter, Judge William F. Cooper, and Hon. Jordan Stokes announced in the following words a scheme of Tennessee History:

"In military and political circles Tennessee occupies a front rank; yet, strangely enough, to this day the history of the State is a blank. Haywood, Ramsey, and Putnam have done a work meriting profound thanks; but that work respects the early settlements mainly. If any one wishes information concerning any department of Tennessee history, with the exception of a few biographies, it can be had only by reference to official documents, or old files of newspapers, practically inaccessible. To remedy this defect, Dr. J. Berrien Lindsley has, since 1862, devoted much time and labor. He now proposes to edit and publish a series of volumes covering the whole field. The first, embracing the military annals from 1812 to 1865 inclusive, he hopes to get out during the current year. In prosecuting this work, he intends visiting every county in the State, and relies upon cordial and liberal coöperation from the people of Tennessee. We are personally aware of the patient drudgery and care exercised by Dr. Lindsley in collecting his materials. Trained to scientific accuracy, Dr. Lindsley will present to the public a work which may be relied on as a worthy memorial to the noble men who have given our State its proud preëminence. The record is brilliant; Dr. Lindsley's labors will make it known. The orator, the poet, the historian, the publicist, may hereafter at pleasure adorn, embellish, philosophize.

"Having for years been encouraged by leading citizens to prosecute his labors, the editor now comes before the great public of Tennessee. We are confident that this public will give him such a welcome as will keep him hard at work until our State history is rescued from its present oblivion, and placed in every intelligent household within its borders."

Soon thereafter the editor entered upon an extensive correspondence with persons likely to take part in the work, both within and without the limits of the State. Pamphlets, fully explaining the plan of the history, were circulated in great numbers and with system. Public meetings were held in the chief cities, calling general attention to the subject. The newspaper press everywhere, with characteristic liberality, gave it fame. A large body of able contributors was enlisted, and these in their turn interested others.

As a result of four years patient, laborious, persistent effort, this volume appears. It is impossible for any one to realize its defects more painfully than does the editor. Gaps, errors, omissions, too numerous to specify, occur. Vain, vain have been repeated endeavors to fill these gaps, to prevent these errors and omissions; yet herewith is submitted to the public a splendid tribute to the fame and memory of the Confederate soldiery of Tennessee.

To the many gentlemen who, with pen or otherwise, have assisted in this massive volume our thanks are gratefully given. The names of our literary helpers appear in the progress of the book. Gen. Marcus J. Wright, of the War Records Office, Washington; Rev. J. Wm. Jones, D.D., Secretary of the Southern Historical Society, Richmond; and Anson Nelson, Secretary of the Tennessee Historical Society, have with the utmost liberality encouraged this publication from the date of its announcement.

In revising the manuscripts and in final proof-reading Rev. M. B. DeWitt, D.D., for years Chaplain of the Eighth Tennessee Infantry, and so well known afterward as editor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church books and periodicals, has rendered most valuable help. Mr. J. L. Kirby, Proof-reader of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, has saved a world of trouble. It is pleasant to work with such coadjutors.

Our many friends whose "Contribution Gallery" has made this a monumental no less than a memorial volume will receive the thanks of the distant public for this presentment of the rank and file of the Tennessee Volunteers in the Confederate States Army.

Shall this great military history of Confederate Tennessee be completed? Shall the whole plan of a cyclopedia of Tennessee history be carried out? These questions must be decided by the Tennessee public, and that public will decide in the affirmative. A companion volume to this one can be brought out in January, 1887, embracing the "Index of Officers and the Index of Men." This would give in alphabetical order the names of some eight thousand officers and of about sixty thousand soldiers. A third series, to correct and complete the regimental histories and memorial rolls, and to give biographical notes of the prominent Confederates, can be made ready for the public by January, 1888. The three volumes would constitute an exhaustive record of Confederate Tennessee. The present volume contains the epitaphs of nine thousand one hundred and eight soldiers who fell in battle or died in the service, as shown in the official memorial rolls. Probably as many more are as yet unrecorded. These all gave up their lives for Patria, and at least their names should receive honorable mention.

NASHVILLE, January 6, 1886.

NOTE.—George E. Wharton, First Infantry, was killed at Perryville, October 8, 1862. The Estes lads were brothers from Haywood county; served in the Sixth Infantry from the commencement of the war; were killed at Atlanta, Ga., July 22, 1864. Henry L. C. Ramage, First Infantry, was killed at Kennesaw Mountain, June 23, 1864. Albert B. Fall, see page 857. Joseph L. Campbell, Color-bearer, First Infantry, was killed at Chickamauga, September 19, 1863.

Seventh Cavalry (West Tennessee) group: James Fentress was for a short time Lieutenant in the Fourth Infantry, and then served during the war as a private in the Seventh Cavalry.

MEMORANDA.

The Preface is an extract from an address to the Alumni Society of the University of Nashville, June 15, 1871, by Hon. William H. Stephens, formerly of Jackson, Tenn., now of Los Angeles, Cal.

In so great a mass of names and dates very many errors will certainly be found. So soon as discovered, these will be corrected in the stereotype-plates. Information as to such errors will be gratefully received.

In Colonel McGuire's sketch of the Thirty-second Regiment, the word "hundred" is omitted in the tenth line of the first paragraph on page 477. The reading should be: "Some ten or fifteen hundred feet below the summit of the Point," etc.

Colonel J. N. Aiken's place of residence, "Charlestown, Tenn.," does not appear with his name on page 521, it having been inadvertently left out of the manuscript. It will be inserted in the next edition of this volume.
